Kidney stone coding: development and implementation of a method for coding renal calculi. Kidney stone coding is a comprehensive system for classifying and coding kidney stones. Although there are numerous systems for coding kidney stones, few of them employ ontological (ontological meaning "philosophy of being") concepts. In addition, many of them are incomplete. The authors review the literature on coding kidney stones and develop an ontological-based classification for kidney stones. The classification, which has been tested for interrater reliability, includes eight classes, including sessile and pedunculated renal calculi, hollow and solid calculi, and male and female calculi. This system has the advantage of relying on the nature of the stones rather than on their size or number.Q: iPhone: The New AppStore Rules I published my application (which was already in the appstore) a couple of days ago and it's been gaining a couple of hundred downloads a day. But now it's been rejected by the store because of new "rules". I've read the whole policy for iPhone apps but it's still none of the below: I use an in-app purchase and sell a consumable. I use an ad. I use AdMob for the ad but only have a few seconds left in the middle of the first chapter and I've also read that AdMob is not enough to get approved into the appstore. I've uploaded the same app on other platforms and it's been approved. So my question is, have I missed something when it comes to the appstore rules or is there something else I should worry about? A: OK, I've been reading the Appstore guidelines again and also the guidelines for iTunes connect. I do have ads. I haven't submitted them but I guess they'll upload them if approved. Also, I haven't submitted an In-App-Purchase but I guess it's not that important, since I'm using it only in the middle of the story. Also, it's relevant to mention that I used to have ads in the first version of the app, since it was early. I do have ads in the second version since it's my first one to be approved and I see them on iTunes connect but there's nothing saying that I have to remove them later. Basically, I don't think I've missed anything and I have no worries. Q: Question about how

The Florida Film Critics Circle has suspended all events and parties until March 8 following the death of John Wayne. Members voted to temporarily suspend all events, from receptions to dinners, until their next scheduled meeting, which is March 8. It's the first such event suspension in the FFC's two-decade history. The FFC announced John Wayne's death Friday, and members voted to suspend all events in his honor. Wayne, who died Thursday at age 79 after a stroke, was the recipient of the life achievement award at the Palm Springs Film Fest in May. The FFC includes members of the Orlando Film Critics Circle. Members who voted to suspend events include: Andrew Breitbart, the FFC's president; Brian Donahue, managing director; Daniel Wool, managing editor; Michael C. The Baader-Meinhof korps, which traces its origins to the leftist "Red Army Faction" (RAF) movement in the 1970s, had been trying to build links with Islamist fighters in Afghanistan, the police said. The group, which was active from 1974 to 1981, is still operating, the authorities said. Over the weekend, officials said they had detained five suspected members of the group in the eastern state of Mecklenburg-Vorpommern, and that they were planning attacks in Germany and Switzerland. A spokesman for the group in Hildburghausen, in the state of Thuringia, confirmed the group had been involved in a training camp in the region. "We have from time to time supplied our international comrades with volunteers," said Michael Traub, a spokeswoman for the group. "We are indeed still active," he added. Preliminary investigations into the attack in Hanover on May 24, which killed one person and wounded 11, suggested that it was carried out by a man
