Plasma concentrations of endogenous insulin in diabetic patients with different glycemc control. Plasma concentrations of endogenous insulin were studied in normal and diabetic patients, as well as in patients with different degrees of glycemc control, by radioimmunoassay. Unmedicated diabetics had a high level of insulin (22 +/- 2.8 pmol/l) that was not significantly different from that of normal subjects (24 +/- 1.8 pmol/l). Diabetic patients treated with anti-diabetic medications showed a reduced plasma insulin level (16.3 +/- 3.9 pmol/l) and were also found to have a significantly higher glucose concentration when compared to normal patients (p less than 0.01). This was also true of the patients studied while fasting and after a glucose load. These data indicate that the ability of diabetic patients to produce insulin is not altered in the fasting state, as such, the failure of insulin secretion by diabetic patients becomes more apparent with a glucose load.
