Q: WPF: How to update binding to a DependencyProperty to reflect property change? If you have a DependencyProperty in a class as below, how can you get it to update when the property changes? In my case, MyEditTextProperty is a TextBox control bound to the bound property. `public class FrmCustomizeSchedule : Window { public string MyEditTextProperty { get { return (string)GetValue(MyEditTextPropertyProperty); } set { SetValue(MyEditTextPropertyProperty, value); } } }` A: The Framework has a PropertyChangedCallback that is triggered when the value of a DependencyProperty is changed. If the value of your property changes, the value of the DependencyProperty will be updated. MSDN PropertyChangedCallback Example: `class FrmCustomizeSchedule : Window { public string MyEditTextProperty { get { return (string)GetValue(MyEditTextPropertyProperty); } set { SetValue(MyEditTextPropertyProperty, value); } }`

Living-kidney transplantation (LKTx) is a main treatment for end-stage renal disease (ESRD). It has been successfully performed in the USA and some European countries since the 1970s. China has also performed LKTx since its first transplant in 1979. According to the most recent available data, more than 70,000 patients have received LKTx worldwide. However, LKTx has not been approved for patients with glomerulonephritis in China. The aim of this study was to review the clinical experiences of LKTx in our center. This is a retrospective analysis. From January 2005 to May 2013, 317 LKTx were performed in our center. Of these, 160 were from cadaveric donors (CD-LKTx) and 157 were from living donors (LD-LKTx). The baseline characteristics of the donors and recipients, surgical techniques, complications, and recipient outcomes were reviewed. The mean age of donors in the LD-LKTx group was 33.7 ± 570a42141b
