Regarding the Congress' hazy plan to make the UPA govt face the heat over the India-Iran oil imports, an American oil expert, an economist and an ex-Swiss diplomat, present various versions of what will happen. According to them, the government's current strategy of buying crude oil from Iran is a fallacy. If the global demand for oil is keeping up and prices remain stuck at the $100 mark for long, India's oil imports from Iran will touch a peak of $10 bn this financial year. But experts disagree on how long this will last and what the government can do to tide over this oil import crisis. Though the government doesn't share a lot of information, a rare moment of clarity cropped up during the annual budget when Finance Minister Pranab Mukherjee said, "We have taken a decision to buy crude oil from Iran." However, going by the budget figures, this would mean buying $1.3 billion worth of Iranian oil over and above oil purchased through the Inter-Governmental Agreement. The oil minister, who hasn't ruled out reopening the I
