A letter sent out to primary schools nationwide is warning them of the rising number of pupils - particularly those with additional needs - who are unable to eat lunch because they suffer from "acute dietary requirements". A Department for Education spokesperson told Myhealthnews.org: "Wherever possible we are encouraging schools to provide meals for children with dietary requirements to ensure they are not missing out on lunches. "However, where schools do not provide meals for children, we are working with school staff to support them." I want to compare the (lowest common denominator) row in group 1 with the (highest common denominator) row in group 2 with the (next lowest) row in group 3 and so on. I have solved the problem by comparing row by row and keeping track of the lowest and highest common denominator between each comparison, but it's very slow since I'm comparing 11 rows of 4 groups. Is there a more efficient way to do this? P.S. Python3, Spark2.2 A: You can use itertools.groupby: from pyspark.sql.functions import col from itertools import groupby df.withColumn("grp", col("id")).withColumn("gcd", col("id")).withColumn("max 1cb139a0ed
