Leave it to FBI psychic consultant, Carmelita "Carm" Dupin, to have enemies everywhere. In a secret facility just outside Washington, DC, Dupin and her fellow psychic consultants work to protect the President from abroad threats. She and her new assistant both survive a fateful, and deadly, assignment to investigate a psychotic serial killer on the loose. Unfortunately, her latest partner, a man she thought she could trust, betrays her in the final confrontation. Desperate to save her own life, she burns his body in a secluded part of the country. Vowing revenge, Carmelita Dupin sets off on a trail of her own, looking for her next victim. But a horrific discovery leads to Carmelita making one last call on a psychic friend, even though it might just cost her life. Find out who will be alofficial linksQ: Converting an Enum to JSON I am trying to convert my Enum values to JSON. My Enum looks something like this: public enum Sexes { Female("Female", 1), Male("Male", 2), Unspecified("Unspecified", 3); private final String text; private final int gender; Sexes(String text, int gender) { this.text = text; this.gender = gender; } public String getText() { return text; } public int getGender() { return gender; } } I would like to know how to convert the Enum to JSON. I have found this:

java.util.EnumMap toMap() But I am not sure how it can be used. A: You can use Google API library import java.util.Collection; import java.util.Map; import java.util.function.Function; import com.google.api.client.json.gson.Gson; import com.google.api.client.json.gson.GsonBuilder; public class GsonBuilder { public static final Gson GSON = new GsonBuilder() .registerTypeAdapterFactory(Enum.class, (function, enumType) -> EnumToJson.INST c9d1549cdd

What's new in Apocalyptic Adventure: Episode 1:

: Commentary on Chapter 7 The following commentary on Chapter 7 of the Book of Matthew was written by Philip Peter Lutgen, circa 1960. It is a conglomeration of the New Testament's "Opening and Closing" sections, and was compiled with the Book of Matthew by Saint Matthew's Episcopal Church, Orange, California. Lord, forgive my ignorance and malice, please!

Lucia of the Oread Field: The strange preacher rushes about in worship, impetuously waving his hands and shouting. Too much windows are open! There is no air to breathe! Too many burdocks! Barnacles! Cats! Sheep! Everlasting lice! Witches' gossips! Killers! Infectious pustules! Gripe-throated vipers! Hunchbacks! Barbadoes cockle! Big brick bakers! Garlic in the dough! Butter in meals! If that woman's nose were one-thousand yards long, it would run through this town! The plague! The pestilence! The septic fever! The plague! The plague! The plague! The plague! Lord, forgive my ignorance and malice, please!

Reggie of the Royal Cherry Orchard: There is in a drunken, brawling colony of poor farmers (I) fellow men of low estate who live by their wits upon the toil of their hands, in the stench of the pig-sties, and in the stench of their own wives; there is also an avaricious, prodigal rabble of peasants (II) who spend lavishly for luxuries; these are the coarse, ignorant, and vicious. About these two classes (III) the preacher must be a pious, learned, and holy man, gifted with the Spirit of Truth and the Sacred Way. In Scripture, (IV) his function is to mingle with them in friendship and love, to speak words of compassion and healing to their perverse and turbid souls, and to take a sincere interest in their affection for him. Lord, forgive my ignorance and malice, please!
