Video games are better when they're played on a PC. they shouldn't be made available. The present invention relates to a high temperature creepage line apparatus, as well as to a damping material, that may be used as part of such apparatus. Creepage line devices, or "crawl strips," are commonly used to provide electrical isolation between segments of electrical circuits, particularly between two or more areas within a single circuit board. Creepage line devices typically comprise two or more relatively thin conductive layers, separated by a spacer layer. The term "crawl strip" is somewhat of a misnomer, since the creepage line device and its use are intended for high temperatures and/or extremely high electrical currents, which, because of the added electrical insulation provided by the spacer layer, permit the propagation of any creepage line current without a substantial change in voltage, in contrast with "creepage creepers" that do not rely on a separation between conductive layers for electrical insulation. Such creepage line devices may be formed on circuit boards as part of the overall circuit board, as a discrete component, or in other ways. Creeping currents (i.e., alternating currents) may be induced into a creepage line device by another current flowing in the circuit for which the creepage line device is intended to provide isolation. The creepage line devices, and the processes for forming them, are well-known to those skilled in the art. See, for example, the following U.S. Pat.
