Borek namiot Borek namiot (), also referred to as "burek" in English, is a type of rich, layered flatbread typically made from wheat dough, butter, and milk. It is baked at a high temperature, sometimes cooked at a higher temperature than for other kinds of bread. Origin and etymology Borek namiot is derived from the Persian word for "thick", berak, in reference to its high ratio of butter to dough. "Namiot" means "ladies" in Polish and "namiata" means "having a thick shape" in Polish. The name was borrowed into English as burek and the first recorded usage was in the work of Henry Handel Richardson, who published a short novel entitled Carnacki the Ghost-Finder in 1890. It is one of the most popular breads in Poland, and is often consumed at breakfast or a light meal. It is also eaten at breakfast throughout the country during the summertime as a substitute for soft bread. Gallery References External links Category:Breads Category:Polish cuisine Category:Pierogi

Technical Field of the Invention The invention relates to a method of optimizing the surface roughness (Ra) and other parameters of a vitreous body in the course of growing the body while preserving the initial parameters of its surface. In particular, a method of this kind is suitable for controlling the surface of an optical glass body in the course of its production, for instance by being used for the purpose of preparing a glass substrate having several layers of different materials. Description of the Prior Art The invention is based on the problem of defining a method which does not make use of processes which are too slow and are therefore too expensive. Gov. John Kasich is inviting the media to watch the final debate on Monday. But it's in a virtual arena on his Facebook page. It's not clear how many media outlets will attend, but some of them have shown interest. The debate with is among the last of the Republican presidential candidates before the New York primary. Meanwhile, Donald Trump and Ted Cruz are facing off in an overseas primary in Wisconsin. Ohio Gov. John Kasich is facing just his second debate next week. He wants the media to see it live on Facebook. But the unconventional forum, which Kasich has been hosting on his Facebook page, means it will be in an arena for the world to see. "Instead of a debate stage with 10 people, I wanted to give people a chance to ask questions and actually see what's going on," Kasich told the Cincinnati Enquirer. "I was surprised that it went so well." Unlike typical presidential debates, Kasich is not holding one of the biggest on-site events: a town hall on Fox News. Instead, the rally will be a series of questions submitted by Facebook followers. That's right. On his Facebook page. Ohio has been known as one of the most important battleground states. But Kasich, who is the only primary winner of the past two games, is
