The colour scheme palette is one of the essential tools in graphic communications for expressing ideas visually. Today's designers are increasingly aware of the powerful influence that colour can have on a person's perception of a message. The use of colour in the field of health has begun to receive attention. This paper presents a working-model of colour schemes based on health contexts and discusses the application of such schemes in both the development and expansion of health-related programmes and organisations, namely, health promotion and disease prevention programmes, medical and dental clinics and hospitals, and community-based health organisations. The characteristics of the proposed schemes and the advantages and disadvantages of their applications are described.jQuery.sap.uxap.importMarker.register("sap.m"); jQuery.sap.uxap.importMarker.register("jquery.sap.uxap.jssPdf.IImportUIJS"); jQuery.sap.global.uxap.jssPdf = jQuery.sap.uxap.importMarker.getObject("jquery.sap.uxap.jssPdf");Q: Clojure map distinct keys by value of each value For example: (def my-map {:a :1 :b :1 :c :1 :d :1 :e :1}) Desired output: (filter #(= :a %) (map :a my-map)) => (:a :b :c :d :e)

All i can think of is finding a "do it yourself" site andÂ .Q: How to get a key typed in a textbox to disable an input box So I've been working on this page and I have an input box that will be disabled after a certain amount of time. My issue is that I need to use the same input box as well as a text box. I have disabled the text box at the moment, but how can I make the text box enable once I type a key in the input box? A: This is pretty easy, i think. You can bind the value of one of the textboxes to the key-down-function of the other. It uses the same mechanism as keypress. window.onload = function(){ document.getElementById('inputText').addEventListener('keydown', function(e) { // disable other input, for example here you'd just use document.getElementById('otherInput').disabled=true }); } var inputText = document.getElementById('inputText'); var otherInput = document.getElementById('otherInput'); inputText.addEventListener('keydown', function(e) { // if(e.keyCode == 32) { // otherInput.disabled = true; // } }); Genetic and chemical processes involved in transposition of the insertion sequence IS3 in Salmonella typhimurium. The insertion sequence 3 (IS3) of Salmonella typhimurium contains a 3'-end (tail) sequence, TGNANTTC or TGNACC, which is required for efficient transposition. The tail was originally shown to be involved in the transformation process leading to DNA inversion, and thus functions as a recognition sequence for a transposition-specific nicking enzyme.
