Perhaps more than any other generation of football video games, FIFA has been the benchmark of realism, with each successive game featuring more realism than the last. FIFA developed its own physics engine that has allowed for an unparalleled level of realism in-game. While not without controversy, FIFA was the real benchmark of real-world game realism. FIFA 22 uses the new HyperMotion engine, which combines real-world and virtual physics to create a new level of player realism in physics-based gameplay. The new engine is designed to create an authentic reality-based experience. Along with previously announced enhancements to the physics engine, FIFA 22 introduces a number of other gameplay features and improvements. FIFA 22 marks the first major FIFA football title in nearly seven years, and the first to feature the new, independent sports game development studio, EA Labels. EA Labels is under the ownership of EA Worldwide Studios and features a strong roster of development talent and resources. FIFA 22 is scheduled to ship for Xbox One, PlayStation 4 and PC on September 27, 2017.
