The video of the gameplay demonstrates the intensity of the real life data that is stored in the game as the players use the same data in the course of game play. The video shows some of the highlights of the match between FIFA 22 with the real-life data and FIFA 19 with motion capture physics. With FIFA 21, FIFA introduced the "Fresh Air Infant" and "Fresh Air Adult" motion capture suits. The "Fresh Air Infant" is the more basic model that was developed to help analyze the real-life data collected from eight micro-mini cameras (4 cameras in each of the chest, head, shoulder, upper arm and hip). "Fresh Air Adult" is the more advanced version of the system and has a total of 28 motion capture cameras used to capture the movement of a player. The data captured in the motion capture suit is then saved to memory card and the player can then transfer the data to a computer and analyze the data to fine-tune the game. This system is called "Player Analysis" in FIFA 21. Here is the video that shows the former FIFA 19 with the "Fresh Air Infant" and the latter FIFA 21 with the "Fresh Air Adult" and comparison of the game data with the real life movement of the players. Both the "Fresh Air Infant" and the "Fresh Air Adult" are made out of breathable and water resistant material that allows for continuous movement of the player. The motion capture suits record the motions of players and store the captured data in the memory cards or USB key. The memory card can then be connected to the PlayStation 4 or Xbox One console and the data can be uploaded to the game. In FIFA 19, the memory card was part of the game itself and there was no need for a separate device. FIFA 21 with the "Fresh Air Infant" or the "Fresh Air Adult" motion capture suits has a USB cable that allows the player to connect the memory card directly to the console. The memory card or USB key can also be connected to another computer running the EA SPORTS game creator. The game creator allows the player to add game play enhancements and customizations into the game. For example, it could be creating goals (points), corner kicks and even training drills for the players. The player can also have the ability to customize their game based on the experience of different types of players as well as the game's character. Now that
