1914-1918 In 1914, the Habsburgs discovered the value of Germanic culture and adopted it, conquering Austria and running it as a cultural colony. Nazi authoritarians appealed to ethnic identity, nationalism, and the innate craving for supremacy of their own people, based on the tenets of Germanic ideology. The Bismarckian treaties of Versailles forced Germany into a smaller and weaker state, a vassal state of the Great Powers. The German war machine was broken. At the invitation of the Great Powers, Germany had been converted into a confederation of states and had become a state in its own right. The Fascist movement was born at this juncture, born out of a desire to assert the identity of the German people and gain the respect and support of their oppressors.

1918-1923 Fascism was opposed by several nationalist groups, including the Revolutionary Movement (Revolutionäre Zukunft), the Nationalist Socialist German Student Movement (Nationalsozialistische Deutsche Studentenbund, NSDStB), and the Workers' Revolutionary Party (Arbeiter-Revolutionäre Partei, ARP). These groups were soon united in a coalition called the German Communist Party (Kommunistische Partei Deutschlands, KPD). Soon the official Communist Party of Germany was established in 1920, with a new name, the Communist Party of Germany (Kommunistische Partei Deutschlands, KPD).

After the post-war defeat of Germany and the harsh terms of the Versailles treaty, the KPD had been outlawed and their membership was forced to flee abroad. In 1919, the KPD formed the Communist International with 20 other international organisations to support the revolutionary movement in Europe. While the left wing of the KPD was still within the Communist International, supporters of the so-called Cadre Faction
