v2.0 M040 with HelpCenter.Hundreds of refugees and asylum seekers are stranded in NSW without power as a result of the state's catastrophic storm this week, including more than a dozen Syrian families. The NSW Office of the Commissioner for Refugee Rights received several complaints from asylum seekers and refugees in NSW who had been cut off from their power and phone networks for the past three days as the storm took hold. "The recent storm has affected several hundred people around Australia. The most vulnerable have been cut off from power and communications due to the height of the storm and prolonged windy conditions. "It is especially tragic to see this as several hundred Syrian families have been cut off for several days, and the storm was forecast to last for several more days." Seventeen-year-old Zachs developed a "severe cough" during the storm and is unable to move around to eat, drink or take care of himself. (ABC News: Michael McKernan) The office has contacted the Department of Home Affairs and Immigration department to ensure the refugees are being cared for and give them the support they
