Here's the thing, I have a type that represents a user: public class User { public string UserName { get; set; } public string FirstName { get; set; } public string LastName { get; set; } public int Points { get; set; } } And I would like to create some repository that has the following signature: public class UserRepository { //... } Basically, what I want is to be able to create that repository from a User object, like so: var userRepository = new UserRepository(); And then be able to use that. The question is, how do I do that? I've tried a few things: container.Resolve>(); container.Resolve>(); container.Resolve>(); container.Resolve>(d => d.UseSingleInstance = true); But no luck, all of them return null. I'm guessing it has something to do with the fact that the type it has to resolve is generic, so it doesn't know what TUser is. I could make the type of the User object TUser, and specify it in the container, but that would defeat the point of having it be generic. Is there a way to do this? A: You need to tell Autofac that the UserRepository type is open. That would be done by creating an open registration. You should probably use Automapper's map and when-mapped attributes to e79caf774b

When the gridlock on health care subsided, the President had an idea, one he believed could help him get re-elected. The wall was worked up, a temporary solution to get the President re-elected that went beyond what anyone believed possible. The problem is, the wall is about 2,000 miles long, and "secure" does not mean anything. It's not even illegal to cross the border. They can be back in their own
