Joey Stombaugh Stombaugh's Amerika Carolina School of the Arts Carolinas State College. ioned for changing gender, race, religion, sexual orientation, or ethnic and cultural background. Introduction to Law. This subproject is one of many research subprojects utilizing the resources provided by a Center grant funded by NIH/NCRR. The subproject and investigator (PI) may have received primary funding from another NIH source, and thus could be represented in other CRISP entries. The institution listed is for the Center, which is not necessarily the institution for the investigator. Transgenic animal models have been used to study for the neural cell adhesion molecule (NCAM) because the protein is a cell-surface glycoprotein that is expressed at high levels during neuronal development. Mutations in NCAM are associated with neurological diseases such as mental retardation, dyslexia and epilepsy. A critical aspect of normal brain development is the migration of neurons to their correct targets within the growing brain. This migration depends on the homophilic binding properties of NCAM. NCAM exists in both homophilic and heterophilic forms. The binding of NCAM is controlled by the homophilic binding property of the different NCAM isoforms and by the presence of laminin-2, which is an important receptor for NCAM. Mice homozygous for a mutation in the NCAM gene have severely delayed myelination, impaired brain development and behavioral abnormalities. The proposed work will create transgenic animals with the unique combination of NCAM and laminin-2 protein functions. Using immunocytochemistry techniques, NCAM deficient mice (neurocan) will be cross-bred with the laminin-2 deficient mice and embryos will be examined for the presence of structural defects in the brain. The heterophilic binding properties of transgenic embryonic tissues will be examined using a variety of techniques including co-culture assays and cell migration assays. The heterophilic binding properties will be analyzed using NCAM-Fc (a protein composed of the extracellular domain of NCAM fused to the Fc of human IgG1, which has been shown to bind laminin-2 in an in vitro cell assay. These studies will provide new insights into brain development and the neurological disorders associated with dysregulation of NCAM. Conventionally, there is known a variable compression ratio engine that performs compression at a high compression ratio when the engine is operating at a low load and performs compression at a low
