Field of the Invention The present invention relates to a sheet processing apparatus, and an image forming apparatus. 2. Description of the Related Art It is necessary to temporarily carry out registration between an image bearing member (image bearer) such as a photosensitive drum and an image transfer member in an image forming apparatus such as a laser printer, a copier or the like. For this reason, the image bearing member and the image transfer member are pivotally moved toward each other. As a result, in a state where the two members are contacted together, the two members are rotated in a direction opposite to the direction of a transport path. At this time, a sufficient friction force is formed between a photoreceptor and a transfer roller, between a transfer roller and an intermediate transfer member, between a transfer belt and the photoreceptor, between a transfer belt and the intermediate transfer member, between an intermediate transfer member and a transfer roller, and between a transfer belt and a transfer roller. However, although an appropriate rotation force is applied to the image bearing member and the image transfer member, it is impossible to apply a sufficient friction force between the image bearing member and the image transfer member by a rotating operation. For this reason, when the rotation of the image bearing member and the image transfer member is stopped in order to perform a normal image forming operation, it is impossible to stably rotate the image bearing member and the image transfer member. In order to solve the above problem, there is suggested a technique in which a contact start/stop (CSS) device including a stopper pin that protrudes to a back surface of a photoreceptor drum is provided to prevent the rotation of the photoreceptor drum at the time when the rotation of the photoreceptor drum is stopped after image formation (U.S. Pat. No. 7,364,087). In this technique, a pinch roller is urged against the photoreceptor drum by a spring. When the photoreceptor drum
