You will need two pcs one to serve as client and one to communicate with it. A typical client usually has 3 settings that can be modified. These are: Speed, delay time and retry delay. The more you adjust these values the more the animation will be distorted. Our client is a Windows PC and connects to a Windows server that runs Microsoft DNS Server, that translates our ip address into our hostname. We use OpenNMS with a Tomcat server for our monitoring needs. The Tomcat server in turn sends heartbeats to a Tripwire server on our network. Tripwire is what detect most of our network intrusions. The firewall on the server will reject connections to some ports that we don't want to connect to the client. The settings that are controlled by the client are: Port that the server should use for the heartbeat and port that it should use to send files over the internet. The server has a static ip address that it uses for the heartbeat and to communicate with the client. I have put several tutorials on how to set this up. If you have any questions please ask. Delayed Event Log Scenario: A drive is failing. The driver reacts to a warning light on the drive by sending the drive a heartbeat. This makes OpenNMS pick it up. It works great. The problem is that in our office we get a lot of drives going bad. They are all healthy when we first put them in the rack and are operating on all fronts. But as time goes on they degrade little by little. When the drives are not operating as expected the drivers react by sending a heartbeat. The OpenNMS node picks this up but the drive is now failing. Due to the heartbeat it reacts much faster than the expected drive failure time. So as the drive is going down OpenNMS continues to send heartbeat messages that are more and more delayed as the drive has actually failed. The problem was caused by the boss's kids who smash everything in the drive rack to play video games. The drives send the heartbeat messages as a quick signal to the OpenNMS server so we get an up to date status of the drive. The solution is simple. The wait command is used to stop the drivers from sending these messages. # Wait for 30 minutes. $wait 15000 After a delay for 15 minutes the driver should stop sending heartbeat messages. So if a drive fails after this delay it will be picked up by OpenNMS. It should react 0cc13bf012

Lisa and her son have used this photo as their profile picture for over a year. "I had no idea until I had my son that I was pregnant. I had just had a miscarriage and they found a fetal scan which was connected to the miscarriage. They found a picture that showed my baby with my feet around my belly. It was taken when I was about seven months pregnant. There were a couple of other pictures of me with my baby. I think they were just photos I had taken of them so I thought maybe my friend or a family member was taking them. I told a family member I didn't know who had taken the pictures and she said her friend had been trying to persuade her to get pregnant and had snapped these. I have no idea how she had got the baby's feet behind me." It was a month later that Lisa discovered the picture had gone viral. "I had a message on Facebook. It said 'Hey, I know you don't remember me but I found this picture of you and your son. If you want to know where I got it I'll give you all the details if you like.' I didn't even know it was on the internet and I started crying. I thought there must be something behind it. What had happened? There had been no explanation or explanation of what had happened with my son. "He died when he was four years old. It was a result of an infection and an oxygen probe. They used the probe to see if I was going to have a miscarriage. But the infection was more life threatening. The first time I found out I had lost my baby was from the doctor. I was hysterical and they had to calm me down before they could give me the news. "They had found the picture of the scan on Facebook in a group of people looking for someone to take their picture. When they found me the picture had already been in the group for about a week." Now in her mid 30s, Lisa is experiencing a second loss. "As we went to adopt, I fell pregnant. The first scan told us that the baby wasn't alive and that was the moment we knew the loss in the picture was our son. He was stillborn. "I had lost my son and
