However, in such a case, it is more difficult to accurately position the resist pattern formed on the first grain material on the second grain material. Accordingly, the manufacturing yield decreases in the resulting semiconductor devices. The above problems become more significant when the second grain material and the first grain material have different diffusion resistances to the dopant contained in the second grain material. For example, when the grain sizes of the first and second grain materials are significantly different from each other, the different diffusion resistances of the first and second grain materials to the dopant in the second grain
