HHS announced Tuesday that 5,014 children have been separated from their parents since last July, and it expects the number to reach 6,000 before the agency's June 5 deadline for reunifying the families. HHS spokesman Matt Lloyd told The Hill that the 5,014 children include both those who have been separated at the border and children who were separated from their families prior to last summer, but have since been reunited. The government will not track how many children have been separated from their parents since last summer, Lloyd said, but promised a "full accounting" of the total separated from their parents before Trump signed a June 20 executive order ending his administration's practice of separating families. The administration has since reversed course on the policy, and families are currently being reunited. In a letter published Monday by The New York Times, the administration warned that it would not be able to reunite children separated at the border from their families by the June 5
