Altered expressions of epidermal growth factor-like domain 7 in renal cell carcinoma. Identification of key molecular pathways and molecules that are deregulated in the genesis of renal cell carcinoma (RCC) remains an important goal to improve prognosis. In the present study, we aimed to investigate the role of epidermal growth factor-like domain 7 (EGFL7) in the development of RCC. The gene expressions of EGFL7 in archived RCC tissues and matched non-tumor tissues were detected by real-time polymerase chain reaction (PCR). The associations of EGFL7 with clinical features and prognosis of patients with RCC were analyzed. The immunohistochemical (IHC) staining of EGFL7 was performed in tissues of RCC and matched non-tumor renal tissues. The expression of EGFL7 mRNA in RCC tissues was significantly higher than that

WASHINGTON □ The Senate is set to consider a bill to create a single exception for law enforcement agents from Fourth Amendment protections for the government to obtain search warrants against individuals. The bill passed the Senate Judiciary Committee on a party-line vote. The measure, introduced by Sen. Pat Leahy, D-Vt., and 11 Republicans, would establish an exception for officers who detect explosives or other hazardous materials in transit or on public property, even if that means obtaining a warrant to look at the contents of the shipment. The measure would allow police officers to obtain warrants without probable cause to peek inside shipping containers, packages or other containers without probable cause for hazardous materials. If two of the three panel members vote "yes," then the full Senate votes on whether to limit searches of packages and other items to probable cause. A "no" vote by two-thirds of the Senate would allow the measure to pass. Probable cause is the right of citizens to be told by law enforcement when agents can search them. Federal agents can search or seize any item without a warrant as long as it doesn't contain the actual explosives or hazardous material. But they must get a warrant to pry into items that contain chemicals, materials or equipment, including hazardous chemicals, that could be used in an explosive. If the House passes the Leahy measure, then the only question would be whether the White House can veto it and, if it does, whether the House can override that veto. Sen. Daniel Akaka, D-Hawaii, has already introduced a bill to authorize the Justice Department to create an exception from search and seizure protections for buildings that are vital to national security. Critics of the Leahy measure are skeptical that the law will always be followed and says police can already search without warrants if it's urgent, in emergency or a standoff situation, or if there is a strong basis for a warrant. "This proposed exception seems to
