How to find or determine that some process is waiting for some database query to return? As the title says, I want to find some way of finding that some process is waiting on some database query to return, but I couldn't find any method that would allow me to do that. A: If you have a thread executing a SELECT query, you could catch an SQLException and check the SqlError's Message property for a Text indicating what the current wait status is. You can read more about SqlError You can also try to catch the end of the conversation (the SqlConnection) and then query the ServerStateChange event which lists what the state of the server is at any time. See the ServerStateChange event for more details An Example: public class Example { public static void Main(string[] args) { using (SqlConnection connection = new SqlConnection(@"Data Source=localhost\SQLEXPRESS;Integrated Security=SSPI;Initial Catalog=master")) { connection.Open(); try { using (SqlCommand command = connection.CreateCommand()) { command.

I think I do not understand something about python, or maybe I misunderstood what a .exe file is for. If I write, for example, import vlc vlc.player.open("./the_video.wmv") is the file written as .exe after that second line has executed? In other words, is that file effectively being treated as a .exe in any way? I could try it by launching Notepad as administrator and running (tried a few different programs) my script there and waiting to see if it complains about a .exe, but I'd like to know if that's actually going to happen or not. A: It is a file that looks like an EXE. You can check this by testing its attributes using win32api: win32api.GetFileAttributes(myfile) Why do you want to know this? A: EXE file is a special kind of executable file. It can be read and written by the OS, because it is a (usually) self-contained program. It starts whatever it is reading and writing on its own, and closes down. On Windows, a magnetic media arrangement comprising a magnetic medium, a substrate with a cover film for the magnetic medium, and a lower intermediate layer for the magnetic medium. The lower intermediate layer contains a metal and has a thickness of 50 to 150 nm. The metal contains indium. Magnetic media arrangements are, for example, known from U.S. Pat. No. 5,583,612, the content of which is incorporated into the present document by reference. U.S. Pat. No.

5,583,612 also describes two different ways of production of a metal layer with indium.

According to the first described method, a metal is melted in a melting device in a vacuum which is connected to a vessel in which the substrate with the cover film is arranged. A substrate
