To sign up or not to sign up to the European Society of Hypertension Working Party on Lipid treatment. The working party on lipid treatment, cochaired by Professors Alain Renaud (Bruxelles, Belgium), Eduardo Nieves (Madrid, Spain), and Francesco Sassi (Rome, Italy), reported on the key issues of the role of lipid lowering as primary therapy in clinical practice. The deliberations were based on presentations and group discussions during the 13th European Society of Hypertension (ESH) World Congress, held in Madrid, Spain from 28-30 May 2002. This report considers the following issues: 1) Which is the ideal lipid profile in patients with coronary heart disease (CHD), and what additional information is now needed to determine the best long-term management strategy? 2) Should lipid lowering be initiated at low levels of low-density lipoprotein cholesterol (LDL-C) or whether aggressive LDL-C lowering is the optimal therapy in patients with CHD and no severe risk factors? 3) What is the LDL-C target in patients with CHD who have one or more cardiovascular risk factors besides hypercholesterolaemia? Is there a role for a particularly aggressive lipid-lowering strategy in these patients? 4) What is the safety and efficacy of fibrates in combination with statins? What are the most effective treatments to reduce triglyceride levels? 5) Is there a role for these treatments in combination, and what is the optimal combination of treatments for the various patient groups? 6) What additional issues related to the use of statins in combination and how can we identify which patients are likely to benefit from these combinations of treatments? final SalesSalesLineItemLine item = sales.addSalesSalesLineItemLine(invoice, billingItem, sessionMock.getCustomer(), invId); final BPartner client = invoice.getBPartner(); final BPartner buyer = invoice.getBuyer(); final CartProductPriceType price = new CartProductPriceType(null, new BigDecimal(10)); final AssignedProductStockStatus status = new AssignedProductStockStatus(null, new BigDecimal(1), new BigDecimal(10)); final Quantity qty1 = new Quantity(0, new BigDecimal(5));

Experimental and theoretical investigation of the dissociation of diacylglycerol. High resolution mass spectrometry combined with theoretical calculations has been used to study the dissociation of diacylglycerol. The behavior of the $(M + H)^+$ for glycerol monoesters was examined in the gas phase and as a function of collisional energy using gas-phase mass spectrometry. From the absence of a $b(3)u(-1)$ transition, it is concluded that the cyclic ether is not present, and thus the presence of a carbocation based on a double bond between the carbons of the glycerol is consistent. The analysis of the fragmentation of the glycerol esters from the protonated molecular ions (MH^+) indicates that the glycerol is not esterified to the fatty acid, but is rather the endo-glyceryl ester with the carboxylate group at C-1. This result is in good agreement with calculations for the reaction and transition structures calculated using B3LYP, M05-2X and BH&HLYP functionals as well as MP2 with the 6-311++G(d,p) basis set. DFT methods with the 6-31G(d) basis set were unable to achieve a true agreement between experiment and calculation.

Q: How to read all parsed script tag? I am trying to get all the text within script tags in a.php file. But it's only getting text in the first script tag. How can i get all the text in all script tags? I am trying to figure it out using the DOMDocument class.

A: Use `getElementsByTagName()` instead of `getElementsByName()` and iterate the returned node list. A few comments: The name of the methods is important. `getElementsByTagName()` returns an array, so you should use the method that returns an array. You could use multiple DOMDocument methods. Using separate DOMDocument instances should provide you with several advantages, but this is independent
