Both databases are on the same server, and I will be developing using the newer_db and pushing changes to the newer_db. The newer_db is the most important of the two databases, so I'd like to keep it as the current source of truth for users. Mule provides support for migrating databases (from old to new, and new to old). Migrating databases in this way will depend on manual operation and there is no guarantee that the current source of truth will even remain usable after the migration. Problem Migrating databases in this way is very manual, I would like to use something automated. Migrating the entire DB is too much for me, as the new DB does not need all of the tables and columns in the old DB. I'm ok with simply importing the new database, and dropping the old one as long as I can have some sort of automated system to detect changes. I'd also like to support auto-migration without dropping the tables (this is also too much work for me). Question How can I dynamically create a connection to a PostgreSQL database from Mule using JDBC? A: First create
