Elden Ring is an innovative fantasy action role-playing game by GRACEWING Inc., developed for PC. Indie Gamers around the world will finally be able to experience the RPG they have been waiting for with this upcoming game, which was first announced in September of 2017. Elden Ring will also be the first game developed by GRACEWING in collaboration with Cartoon Network, which not only managed to bring together the development teams that have worked on the third season of the anime "Attack on Titan", but has also brought together the animation studios of Cartoon Network's sister company – Warner Bros. Animation, as well as the animation studio Madhouse, which produced the anime "Attack on Titan" and "Aldnoah.Zero". ABOUT GRACEWING GRACEWING Inc. is a Japanese game development company based in Osaka. In addition to "Attack on Titan", GRACEWING also developed "Sword Art Online: Lost Song", "Sword Art Online: Fatal Bullet", "Sword Art Online: Hollow Realization", and "Touhou: The Embodiment of Scarlet Devil Maou". While "Sword Art Online: Lost Song" and "Sword Art Online: Hollow Realization" were developed using the existing background of the Sword Art Online game series, "Touhou: The Embodiment of Scarlet Devil Maou" was developed from the beginning with the new world of the Touhou Project series. To date, the company has developed a large number of titles for consoles, with "Attack on Titan" and "Sword Art Online: Lost Song" being the most recent games. The creators of "Attack on Titan", Hajime Isayama and Kyohei Shiomi, made a big impression on all of us with their unique "Attack on Titan" series of work. We at GRACEWING feel like there is no project more important in the gaming industry today than "Attack on Titan" and "Sword Art Online", so we are eager to work on the story of this new game! We will continue to make announcements about the development process over the coming year, so please look forward to it. The popularity of �

Q: From what time to what time During the NBA season, the schedule usually contains 2-3 games per day from the same state (e.g. 4 games at the beginning of the day in California). In a day where the playoffs happen, how is it possible that all the games in one day are still played from the scheduled start time and not from some other time? I played with this question a little by trying to actually apply two different start times to the same day. But then of course the consequence of this would be that during every night, for example, at 50:00 the end of a game would start being played from the "second time" at 50:00. Here I'm showing that for the 3 games played at 12:00 (suggesting that the start time is started at 12:00), the end of the 3 games would start from 00:00. Is it done like this? A: The schedule is initially designed for each region to have one game playing at different times of the day, as to cater for visiting fans. The same schedule is then used by the home team, and the home team's fans and travelling fans switch schedules for alternate games each week. (Just to complicate things, the home team and visitors to the home team alternate the teams who get first choice, so during each series, the teams who switch have the first choice of a different game) The NBA schedules all the games as being between the scheduled start and end times, so you end up with 3 games at noon, and 1 game at midnight. (For a given game, the game is always played at the same time, but that time is the one in which the first game was scheduled for - so if that was 10am, the same game is played at that time - or if that was 5pm, the same game will be played at that time - or if that was 11am, the same game is played at that time. The end of each game will always be played at the scheduled end time, but the length of
