Chronic liver disease (CLD) is a common disorder that may be accompanied by symptoms of anxiety. There is a lack of validated measures to evaluate anxiety in these patients. The aim of this study was to create and evaluate a novel anxiety scale in a sample of outpatients with CLD. Participants were recruited from five hospitals and completed a self-administered questionnaire to assess their level of anxiety and distress using the revised State-Trait Anxiety Inventory (STAI), Patient Health Questionnaire-9 (PHQ-9), and Patient-Reported Outcome Measurement Information System (PROMIS) Anxiety Short Form 8a (SF8a). Using the 10-item version of the STAI and the PHQ-9, as well as the 26-item version of the STAI, a latent class analysis (LCA) identified a 'non-anxious' group and a 'mild-to-moderate anxiety' group. LCA was then repeated using the 8-item PROMIS Anxiety Short Form. LCA results were in accordance with the STAI and PHQ-9 questionnaires. The 'non-anxious' group (n = 188, 49.4%) comprised 16.9% of the total participants 6d1f23a050
